Our plans for a world-class visitor facility at stunning Corrieshalloch in Wester Ross will now progress, thanks to financial support from a special fund.

The £2.3 million project will enable our charity to carry out a number of improvements. These will include: a new visitor centre, improved parking and expansion of the path network with clearer signage and information.

The site is designated as a National Nature Reserve and a short steep walk from the road will bring you to a suspension bridge. From here you can gaze down over a series of crashing waterfalls.

A spokesperson for the charity said: 'Nature and culture are closely linked in the Highlands, and in many places they are central to the local economy, maintaining rural populations, jobs and skills.

The waterfall itself is one of the most spectacular in the country. These new facilities will make a major contribution to the local area, vastly improving the welcome we can offer the visitors who are heading north.

This project will bring significant benefits to the local area for years to come and give visitors even more to enjoy in these iconic areas.'
