It is sometimes said that Weimar Germany experienced boom conditions between 1924 and 1929. ... It proved immensely difficult to form coalitions with majority support in the Reichstag.

Extract C

The unemployment insurance bill of 1927 was admirably suited to deal with the problems of moderate unemployment as existed at the time, but was stretched to the limit when the Depression began to be felt in the following year. The Depression had already had a devastating effect on the economy by the spring of 1929 and it was obvious that Germany would not be able to meet the increased payments demanded by the Dawes Plan that year. With 3 million unemployed by February 1929 it was unlikely that the unemployment insurance fund would be able to meet the demands made upon it.

A new reparations commission was formed and the resulting Young Plan, published in June 1929, reduced the annual payments. The right-wing parties mounted a massive campaign against the Young Commission. Hitler and the NSDAP joined the campaign and Hitler's tactics paid handsome dividends. He was now in respectable company and he began to focus his attention on the disaffected middle classes. The response was immediate. Money began to flow into the party's coffers and spectacular gains were made in state elections. All this seems to have escaped the notice of politicians in Berlin.
