SOURCE A

[Photographs showing Native American children before and after attending an American boarding school in 1923. On the left, three boys are sitting on low chairs. They have long hair and two have a feather on their heads. They are all wearing traditional Native American clothes with animal skins. On the right the boys are wearing a military-style uniform with trousers and buttoned jackets. They have short haircuts and two are seated more upright on dining-room chairs]

SOURCE B

[An American cartoon entitled 'The only way to handle it' published in a popular American newspaper in 1921. It shows large numbers of Europeans cramming into the wide end of a large funnel which crosses from Europe to the USA. A few people carrying cases are coming out of the other end of the funnel and walking across the USA. A man representing America, who is wearing stars and stripes clothing and hat, is putting in a gate across part of the narrow section at the end of the funnel. The gate is labelled 3%]

There are a few rules that all girls from good families should follow. While at college she must have a chaperone supervising her at any entertainment – be it a football game at Harvard, or to an afternoon tea, just as if she were at home with her own people. We will not accept any sort of immoral behaviour at this college.

SOURCE D

The older generation had pretty well ruined this world before passing it on to us – with women accepting a lower status than men in society. We don't accept the world in the same way as they did when they were young. Since winning the vote, women are becoming a vital part of society.

[John F. Carter, a young journalist writing in an article The Wild Young People published in the American magazine Atlantic Monthly, 1920]
